2022

Content Calendar

Introduction

The year 2021 saw the resumption of the return to events and the first in-person public relations activities in the post-pandemic period. However, the challenges remain, and industry professionals continue to adapt and re-evaluate their PR and marketing strategies to allow the access to the latest industry trends and developments.

Don't miss any details and stay tuned for the dates that will mark the 2022 content calendar.

How to use this guide

Stick to what's relevant and be flexible.

Pick and choose events that make sense for your brand and audience. Once you have your dates, create your media strategy around those. However, dates and formats may change due the uncertainty around Covid-19, so check your PR and marketing plan frequently and adjust as needed.

Stay within your resources.

While smaller budgets will continue to affect many, it's important to schedule content around your resources. Holidays are set, so plan some comforting content around those dates. All holidays are UK unless noted otherwise.

Planning tips

Go off other outlets' editorial calendars:

Hoping to land your story in a certain media outlet? Many outlets share their editorial calendars online (or if you just ask). Use this information to generate story ideas and ensure you're pitching the right story at the right time.

Be mindful of deadlines:

Deadlines vary for outlets and journalists are often working on tight turnaround times. Plan ahead to make sure you submit your content on time and make yourself easily – and readily – available to address any follow up questions journalists may have.

Mind your pitching p's and q's:

Keep in mind the golden rule of pitching: Always make sure the story you're pitching is relevant to the journalist or influencer you're reaching out to (hence, the reason for tip No. 1).

Include multimedia whenever possible:

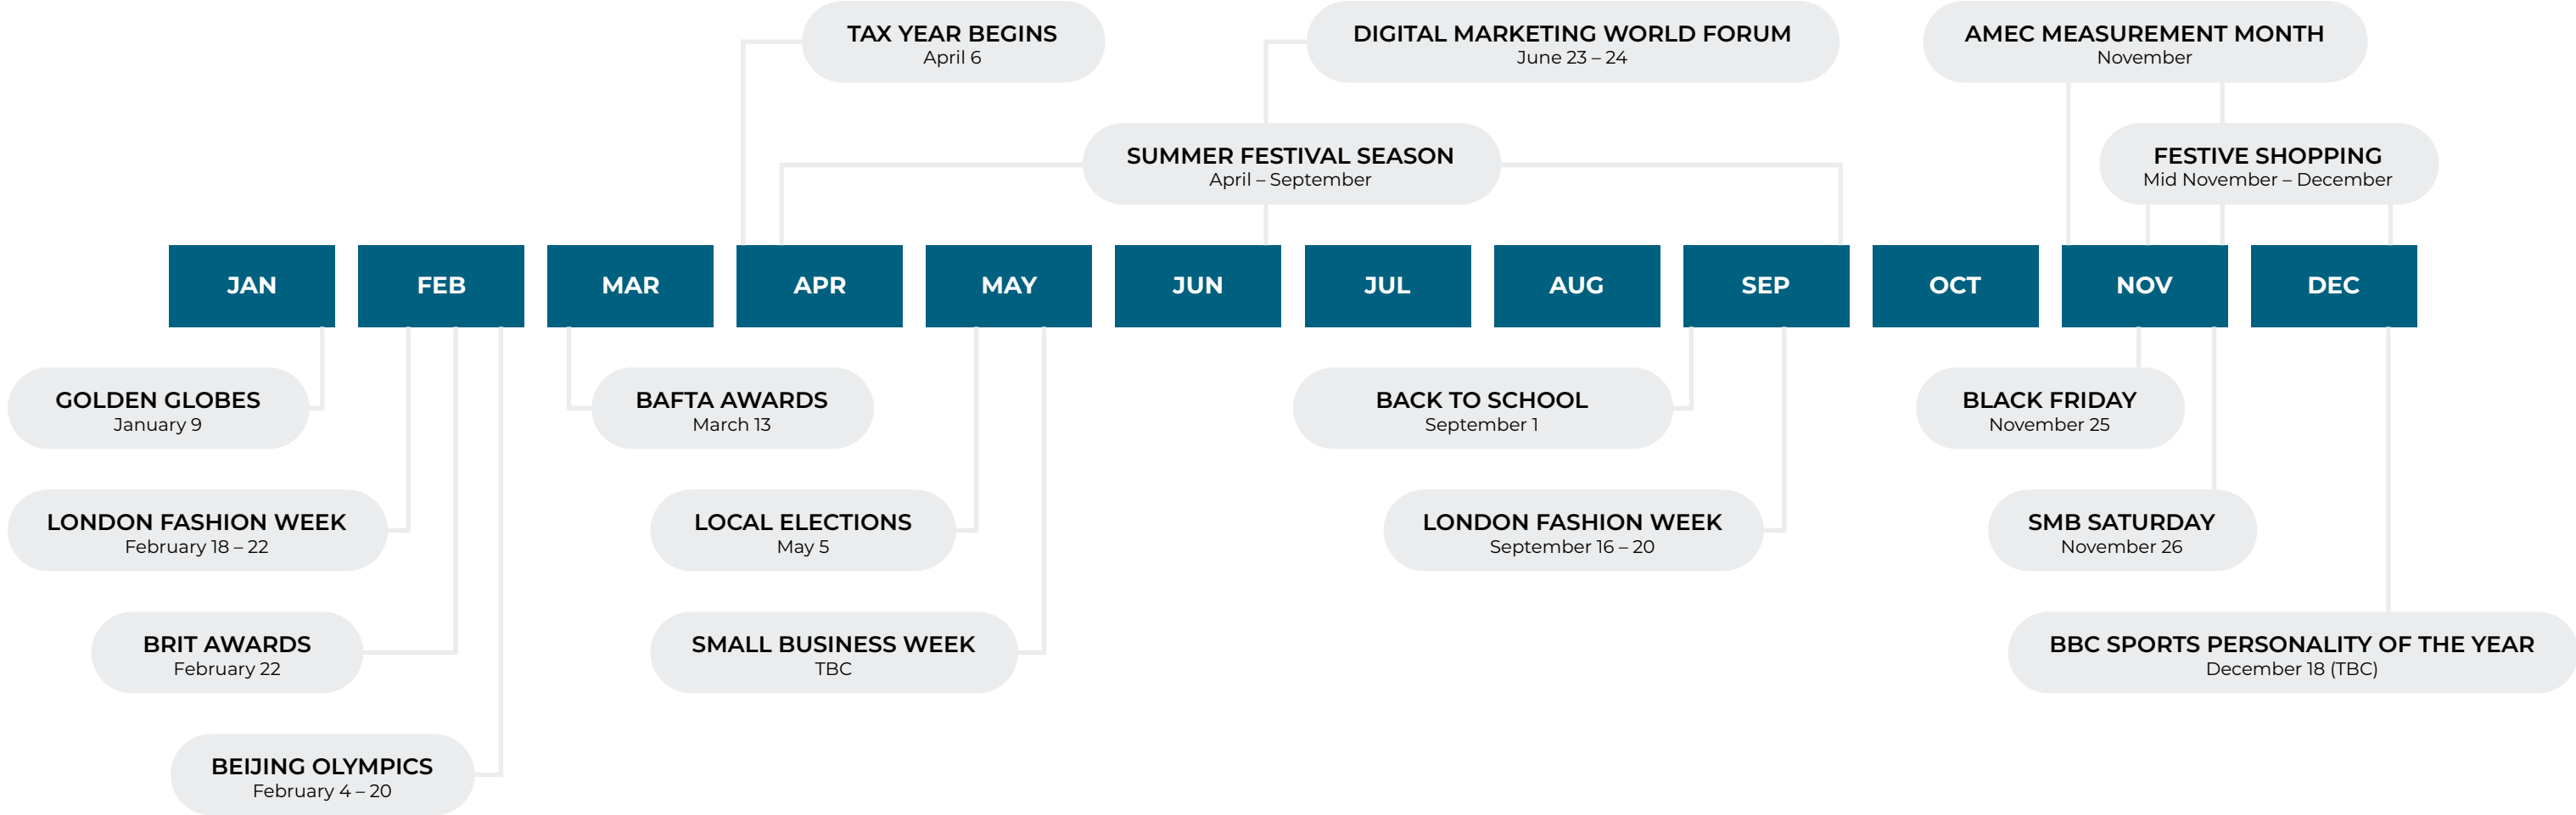

The majority of journalists use multimedia to accompany stories. Make their jobs easier by providing it for them – whether that means embedding or linking to images, videos or infographics in your press releases or creating a press kit or press page that acts as a “one-stop shop” for finding these elements easily.

Remove the obstacles:

Remember – the easier you make it for journalists to do their jobs, the more likely they are to cover your story (and want to work with you in the future).
